Editorial

The Indian Journal of Analytic Philosophy is being published after a gap because of unavoidable reasons. As before, articles to be published in this are expected to be original (i.e., not published elsewhere before). Articles should be written in 12 point new roman and roughly 7 to 10 pages long. Articles should be of a good standard in any area of philosophy with reasonable evidence of the author's analytical ability and flair for critical thinking. Critical writings on any branch of Indian philosophy will be highly welcome.

Each issue of the journal will contain full-length papers as well as discussions and book reviews if available. I wish this journal a continuous and effective run in the days to come.
